

A comprehensive mapping of 3,313 Sasquatch sighting reports that took place over the course of 92 years reveals the broad distribution of the hairy giants across the entire North American continent. The greatest concentrations of encounters can be seen in Northwestern Washington State, and in the High Sierra Mountains of Eastern California. Clustered Sasquatch sightings also dominate Northern Florida and Indiana.

An overlay graphic plots the occurrence of Sasquatch sightings over time, presenting a steady increase from the World War II Era onward, rising to a peak around 2006, and notably falling thereafter despite the dramatic rise in public awareness that followed the 2013 publication of the Sasquatch genome (Ketchum et al., 2013). The rise in sightings and public awareness of the UFO phenomenon follows the same dynamic.

Clear trends witnessed in this comprehensive dataset implicate a significant reduction in Sasquatch activity during recent years that may be related to the confluence of upcoming cosmic supernova events in 2021.

An event cluster showing the greatest concentration of Sasquatch encounters in Canadian territory over the last 150 years surrounds the town of Harrison, in the Agassiz Valley, British Columbia. Spates of sightings have occurred regularly at Hemlock Valley, Ruby Creek, Harrison Hot Springs and at Yale, to the northeast.⁷

Members of the Native Chehalis tribe tell of great meetings of the giant Sasquatch atop Mount Keenan (formerly called Mount Morris), located between Chehalis and Harrison Lakes, visible from a distance due to with signal fires lit through the night during these gatherings that had occurred regularly every four years.

Articles published by J. W. Burns detailed giant Sasquatch encounters involving verbal dialog in the language of the Douglas First Nation, a more northerly Lillooet tribe. The most disturbing story that was retold to Burns and published in his articles reported on the horrific abduction of an indigenous woman of the Chehalis tribe named Serephine Long, who related the event to Burns much later, at age 87.

In 1872, 17-year-old Serephine Long stumbled from the woods into the Chehalis village where she had grown up, at the foot of Mount Keenan. She had been missing for over a 1 year, and been presumed dead for many months prior to her reappearance. Her family was overjoyed despite her condition, as she required significant recovery time before she would be able to fully explain what had happened to her.

Serephine was pregnant and in a terrible state of shock, and gave birth to a monstrous infant several hours after making it back to her village, which died hours after birth. Many days later, once she had partially recovered from her state of shock, she was able to relate her order to her family.

While foraging for cedar roots at the foot of the mountain. On her way back to camp she was surprised by a giant, hairy hand that covered her mouth before she was thrown over the massive shoulder of the hairy creature. It carried her up Mount Keenan, stopping along the way to collect enough soft tree sap to coat his captive's eyes so that she would not be able to see their route.

Serephine was taken by the hairy giant to a large cave occupied by two other giants of his kind. Well-prepared, soft leather hides were used for sleeping comfortably, and she had been well fed by the group during her captivity there, which lasted for well over a year.

Although Serephine was never allowed to leave the cave, she became able to understand their spoken language which seemed similar to that of the Douglas First Nation. She had inferred that the younger giant who had captured her was the son of the two older giants, and she would eventually be subjected to rape.

Months after this took place, Serephine began to fall ill as the fetus grew in her womb. Her illness became more severe, and caused her to plead for freedom to visit with her family before she died. After the severity increased, the young giant reluctantly granted her requests, taking her down the mountain after covering her eyes with pliable tree sap to prevent her from revealing the location of their cave entrance along the high ridgeline near Mount Keenan.

Hemlock Valley below Mount Keenan had been occupied by the ancestors of the Chehalis for many thousands of years, and is now visited by skiers at the recently renamed Sasquatch Mountain Resort, located on the mountain slopes directly below the hidden cave of the Sasquatch family that abducted Serephine Long 1872. This cave will inevitably be rediscovered as an ancient Atlantean temple structure.

Sharply defined ridgelines of the peaks immediately west of the Sasquatch Mountain Resort present a slightly concave, triangular form facing due North, with a descending ridgeline continuing due northeast from the foot of the structure. Microscopic analyses reveal the high metallic particulate content of the stone.

While Serephine gave no specific details in her description of the cave occupied by her giant captors, a review of the topography of the site indicates the occupied chambers and tunnels belonged to an ancient Atlantean temple complex built into the natural mountain and re-façaded in synthetic basalt 'firestone'.

Beyond the many topographical, structural and historical indications supporting the presence of an ancient underground temple complex below Mount Keenan, the relative geoposition of the site also conforms to the well established Atlantean distribution network of pyramids and megalithic temples: [$z_{n+1} = z_n^2$].

Chehalis Pyramid, adjacent to Mount Keenan in British Columbia, Canada (49.379993°N, 121.946461°W) is located 6,724 miles from the Great Pyramid of present-day Giza, Egypt. This resonant distance interval corresponds to 27.01% of Earth's mean circumference of 24,892 miles ($^{27}/_{100}$).

Sasquatch territorial markers
Klawock Mountain, Alaska

Traditional oral history of giant Sasquatch encounters are also related by the Tlingit tribe of Alaska, who warn that Sasquatch territory is marked by huge inverted trees⁸ at Klawock Mountain, Prince of Wales Island, Alaska (55.5743764°N, 133.00928°W), situated 6,466 miles from the Grea Pyramid; 25.98% of Earth's mean circumference ($^{26}/_{100}$). Identical territory markers are seen at Hydaburg Mountain, Prince of Wales Island, Alaska (55.216947°N, 132.78935°W), located 6,488 miles or the 26.06% distance ($^{26}/_{100}$).

When looked at carefully, the global distribution pattern of giant Sasquatch encounter reports follows the same Atlantean geopositioning system used by all major pyramid and megalithic temple sites worldwide. Just as reported by genetics researchers who have investigated biological material from a diverse sampling of this giant humanoid species, the consistent pattern of aggressive territorial control over access to the hidden entrances of ancient underground city complexes reveals their role as guardians.

Encounters with giant Sasquatch took place in the vicinity of Anchorage, Alaska in 2003 and 2004.⁹ One eyewitness had a nighttime encounter with a Sasquatch while snowmobiling with friends in east Anchorage in December of 2003. Another group of nighttime hikers were followed and pelted with snowballs by a giant Sasquatch in southernmost Anchorage, near Potter Marsh at the termination of Little Rabbit Creek.

Anchorage, Alaska has been an epicenter of repeated UFO sightings documented as far back as January of 1965, as reported in the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner.¹⁰ UFO sightings provided in the NUFORC index of UFO sightings include many reports from Anchorage, Alaska over the last 5 decades.¹¹ Every year, sightings continue to be reported by observant individuals who are unable to comprehend what is going on here.

Residents of Anchorage have been stalked by brightly glowing orbs during the night, while small silver spheres were observed by different witnesses during daylight hours. Large, silvery cylindrical objects have been observed on many occasions hovering motionlessly, high in the sky; and various witnesses have reported disc-shaped aerial objects maneuvering in group formations over the region. These witnesses include military personnel stationed at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson, located just south of Anchorage.

A recent video recording made by surprised hikers on O'Malley Peak, east of Anchorage, Alaska demonstrates the intense electrostatic effect at the apex of Atlantean pyramids composed of 'firestone' semiconductor geopolymer basalt (still, at left):

Hiker Emily Crocker and her partner discovered loud static energy atop O'Malley Peak, Anchorage, Alaska, USA. In April 2019, Emily Ott captured her partner testing the static shock in the air. Removing her wooly hat and raising her hand from her head, Emily found that the sound of static electricity was resonating on the peak. Similar to static found on dated TV's, the humming and buzzing freaked out the climbers but is apparently not uncommon in certain conditions.¹²

So, what exactly are these special conditions that generate this type of intense static electricity in the air on mountaintops?

The unusual intensity of the static electrical charge and thick fog captured in the O'Malley Peak video taken by Emily Ott are definitive indicators of localized infrasound standing wave resonance focused at the site by the axis-symmetric faces of the Orion Pyramid Complex.

The extant global Atlantean pyramid network is responsible for this significant enhancement of an inaudible resonance effect, reflecting previous measurements of ultrasound and infrasound frequencies –as well as rotating magnetic fields– recorded by multiple investigators at the Visoko Pyramid of Bosnia and the Padang Pyramid of Java, Indonesia.

Focused infrasound resonance received at the site is efficiently transduced into strong electromagnetic fields surrounding these mountain peaks due to the extremely high metallic content of various artificially reconstructed mountain façades, attesting to reconstruction of the entire area during the Paleolithic high civilization. Inclusion of fine ferromagnetic iron and nickel particles, complemented by an abundance of paramagnetic titanium particles, imbues the synthetic stonework with specialized semiconductor properties.

Chugach Pyramid Complex, east of Anchorage, Alaska (61.106741°N, 149.60141°W, above) is located 6,157 miles from the Great Pyramid of present-day Giza, Egypt; corresponding to 24.73% of Earth's mean circumference ($\frac{99}{400}$). This resonant distance interval is complemented by placement near 61° North latitude, together enhancing infrasound reception at the ancient Atlantean temple city that is still occupied.

Of course, encounters with giant predatory humanoids and related human hybrid species of the Baal ET syndicate are much less common in Alaska than in the lower 48 states due to its remoteness and extreme climate. Vancouver Island, Canada represents another large region of rugged mountains and harsh winter conditions that is heavily occupied by giant Sasquatch clans occupying vast underground systems.

Encounters with quantum predators of the Baal consortium include abductions by small gnome humanoids. In 2006, the abduction of a young girl took place under very unusual circumstances in the town of Palmer, Alaska, northeast of Anchorage. A young girl was abducted during the daylight hours by a small leprechaun gnome that carried the girl off in clear sight of her mother, who had been watching from inside the home.¹³

ET hybridization activities of the Baal ET consortium are evinced by the strong expression of leprechaun genes among the indigenous Knik population, who display many physical characteristics of the small, quadrupedal gnomes (at left). Topographical data of the Matanuska Mountains has been systematically censored by wavy distortions of the data (inset, above). Clearly, the USGS is actively hiding distinctive linear features of Atlantean geopolymer stonework for the purpose of obfuscating abduction activities of the Baal quantum predators.

Matanuska Pyramid Complex east of Palmer, Alaska (61.6034°N, 148.8834°W, above) is located 6,124 miles from the Great Pyramid, comprising 24.60% of Earth's mean circumference ($\frac{123}{500}$), maximizing infrasound reception at the site.

The gold mining town of Portlock, on the Kenai Peninsula, Alaska, was abandoned in 1949 after the deaths of many resident miners; victims of lethal territorial aggression by Sasquatch giants protecting their large cave entrance covered by a large boulder. The large cave entrance is located in an Atlantean geopolymer granite outcropping west of Portlock (59.1676495°N, 151.72044°W, circled above) is located 6,290 miles from the Great Pyramid of Giza, Egypt –comprising 25.27% of Earth’s mean circumference ($^{101}/_{400}$).

Another notable cluster of UFO events has been identified in the high mountain areas north of Paxson, Alaska, with brightly glowing aerial craft often seen hovering above the rugged peaks by many local residents, drivers and even high-altitude airplane traffic flying above this anomaly zone.

Tanana Pyramid Complex, north of Paxson, Alaska (63.4828173°N, 145.6998062°W, above), is located 5,994 miles from the Great Pyramid of present-day Giza, Egypt. This resonant distance interval comprises 24.08% of Earth’s mean circumference ($^{24}/_{100}$), ensuring efficient reception of planetary infrasound at the site.

In late 2018, a pair of hunters from the town of Cashmere, Washington had an unsettling encounter in the low, mountainous terrain to the northwest of Wenatchee, located in Chelan County. The well-prepared hunters were able to take a decent photograph of a giant male Sasquatch individual after it sneered at them and turned uphill to slowly depart the immediate area:

I recently received a telephone call from a 64-year-old Washington resident who had a Bigfoot encounter while hunting with his fiancé. 'KG' was bow hunting for deer on the first day of the season in 2018. He and his fiancé were in a wilderness area, not far from Cashmere, WA in Chelan County. The forest was charred as the result of a wildfire several years before, so much of the area had burnt trees and stumps. There is also new growth throughout. KG has been hunting along a specific game trail for many years.

This particular day, he noticed that the usual high number of deer and elk tracks was considerably less than previous years. Regardless of this, they setup in a blind hoping that they would be successful.

After an hour or so, KG decided that they would move on since there was no activity. It was late afternoon, so they began to walk back towards their vehicle. As they hiked back, something caught KG's eye on the slope above him. He stopped and looked through his binoculars. At first, he thought that the dark hairy creature was a huge black bear. But it stood up and looked directly at him. He could see the face. This wasn't a black bear.

He never imagined that he would ever look into the face of a Bigfoot, as the creature 'sneered' at him and turned. It slowly walked up the slope. KG grabbed his cellphone and took a photo of the back of the creature as it moved off.

The next day, KG returned to the location. He measured a small tree that had been near the Bigfoot. It was approximately 10 ft. in height. The Bigfoot was at least 8 foot in height in comparison. He later noticed a burnt pine tree that was broken off about 12 foot from the ground. A live 4 inch diameter pine had been broken off and set upon the burnt tree (photo below). KG had been sitting on his encounter for almost a year, but finally felt that it should be reported.¹⁴

The giant Sasquatch individual encountered and photographed north of Cashmere shows black skin and hair coloration with the same bristling fur across its back; highly reflective qualities seen in the famous video of a retreating giant female Sasquatch recorded by Roger Patterson at Bluff Creek, California.

While this photograph of the giant ET/human hybrid does not provide enough detail for any significant analysis to be undertaken, close proximity of the sighting to as-yet-unidentified pyramid structures indicates a potential connection. From the brief account given by the eyewitness hunter, it appears the Sasquatch was retreating uphill and away from the direction of origin of the hunters, northward towards Swakane Canyon.

While working in Washington State National Forests, Paul Freeman (below) experienced a series of Sasquatch encounters in the Wenatchee NF in the 1980s, near Cashmere. Freeman discovered and cast several giant footprints as well as a giant handprint¹⁵ that were later verified as authentic by anthropologists.¹⁶

The presence of the giant Sasquatch hybrids in the immediate vicinity of ancient Atlantean pyramid sites seen in the Wenatchee area exactly reflects that situation at yet another Atlantean pyramid complex in the Blues. In 1994, Freeman made a decent video recording in the Blue Mountains of southeastern Washington of his brief sighting of a giant female Sasquatch who appears to be holding a juvenile as she walks by.¹⁷

The many Sasquatch encounters of Paul Freeman were clustered in distinct regions of the Pacific Northwest present the same geopositioning system displayed by Atlantean temple city complexes throughout the world.

This extremely significant global pattern of ancient –as well as modern-day– aerial and subterranean phenomena was first identified and reported by this author in great detail in 'Infraworld' (2014). A following publication entitled 'Baal Hybrids' (2018) reconfirmed this breakthrough, exposing the Baal consortium's long-term mass hybridization of the human race with various ET humanoid species of giants and dwarves.

Evidence from decades of sightings reiterate unequivocal data patterns supporting the hypothesis that the Baal ET consortium presently occupies all of the Atlantean subterranean cities distributed throughout the Pacific Northwest region of North America, once known as the lands of Zu during that bygone Atlantean Era.

By accurately superimposing resonant standing wave patterns onto topography maps of Washington State, a large pyramid complex situated in Chelan County along both sides of Swakane Canyon as it flows eastward, before emptying into the Entiat River. Pyramidal sandstone structures abound in this area.

Even before recognizing resonant standing wave alignments that ran through the Wenatchee National Forest, I had previously identified that area as a search target after reviewing the pertinent case history of Sasquatch sightings there. The confluence of these two lines of inquiry, both geositional and cryptozoological, raised my interest level and drove me to investigate the landscape for possible ancient pyramids or associated hidden tunnel entrances where the nocturnal giants secretly reside below ground.

Another highly suggestive link to the Altantean civilization appears in the name of the nearby river. The name 'Entiat' was given by the indigenous Yakima people, yet bears a more ancient origin as a Paleo-Sanskrit votive name. When translated according to the epigraphic decipherment of K. Schildmann, the name 'Entiat' is composed of 3 hieroglyphs, reading: en ti at, meaning "That: rays pervading" (above).

Before effluence into the Entiat River a few miles to the east, several massive triangular frontal façades loom above the canyon floor. The Entiat Pyramid Complex presents 6 primary temple constructions, identified here for the first time. The most perfectly formed structure in the group is surrounded on every side other geometric temple structures that have apparently been shaped from the sandstone bedrock of the area.

The Entiat pyramid complex, located along Swakane Creek in Chelan County, Washington (47.5666284°N, 120.3383146°W) is situated 6,808 miles from the Great Pyramid of present-day Giza, Egypt.

Definitively reconfirming the great accuracy of the standing wave resonance maps, the Entiat pyramid complex shares the same resonant distance from the Great Pyramid as the Pyramids of Zu in Ravalli County, Montana (at 27.31% distance from the Great Pyramid).

An abundance of large sandstone walkway pavement slabs and plates have been photographed by hikers on the Swakane Canyon Wilderness Trail at successive ridgeline platforms overlooking Swakane Canyon on both sides (overleaf). These are geopolymer sandstone tiles manufactured by Atlantean builders.

Hyper-dimensional strangeness involving UFOs continues to occur several miles to the south of the Entiat Pyramids of Swakane Canyon, surrounding the inviting, azur waters of Lake Chelan. Unusual luminous and acoustic influences were detailed in the recent account of a teenage girl regarding a startling pair of UFO sightings that occurred at Lake Chelan, involving both her aunt and herself:

Lake Chelan
Entiat, Washington

Me and my aunt were swimming in... Lake Chelan... [when] out of nowhere, I looked down and saw a blue light emerging from the water right under me. I freaked out and swam to my aunt and she saw it too. Out of nowhere, it disappeared and about two hours later, when we were [sitting] on the beach chairs, I saw the same looking [blue] light in the sky. No joke.

I shoved my aunt's shoulder but she was already looking at it. It hurt my eyes to look at it but she was just motionless, not blinking. I finally got her attention and she told me that it sounded like it was calling her name over and over again.¹⁸

Various UFO sightings databases contain similar UFO accounts from the vicinity of the Entiat Pyramids. Beginning in early 2019, administrators at MUFON (The Mutual UFO Network) decided to entirely reverse course and have changed their namesake policy of opening sharing of reports concerning extraterrestrial sightings and abductions. While it is now clear there is absolutely nothing 'mutual' about the fraudulent policies driving this obvious government counter-intelligence scheme, the front continues business as usual.

Sandstone pyramid complex
Naches Canyon, Washington

Situated near the community of Nile, Washington, 58 miles to the south-southwest of the Entiat Pyramids, are the weathered remains of yet another ancient Atlantean pyramid city complex. Nile Creek runs into the Naches River through a flat canyon bottom overlooked by several sandstone pyramids with ascending walkways that display the unmistakable symmetries of Atlantean mountain temple façades (above).

The Naches Canyon pyramid complex, Washington (46.8357°N, 120.93542°W) are located 6,866 miles from the Great Pyramid of Giza, Egypt, corresponding to 27.58% of Earth's mean circumference distance.

The most recognizable of these pyramidal mountain features is a pair of stacked pyramids, one behind the other. The smaller pyramidal structure displays a flat top that forms an ascending platform leading to the larger pyramidal face behind. The larger façade shows symmetrical curves leading to an apex walkway.

The Naches River pyramid complex is positioned just over a mile from an ancient sacred site known to Native Yakima Elder Red Elk, where transdimensional cryptids and UFO events surrounding a 'bottomless' stone pit were popularized by landowner Mel Waters during the late 1990s.¹⁹ This discovery of the Naches Canyon pyramid complex implicates the presence of a subterranean city occupied by the Baal ET syndicate.

Translucent blue stones found around Ellensburg, Washington (dubbed 'Ellensburg blue') are Atlantean siloxonate geopolymers colored with indigo dye, similar to the 'skystone' of Sierra Leone.²⁰ An abundance of samples display FeO- and TiO-loaded geopolymer coatings adhering to surfaces as binding agents.

Fragmentary remnants of calcium- and silicon-based geopolymer coatings can be observed as off-white coatings visible on many surfaces of these artifacts, suggesting their original manufacture >13,000 years ago as component tiles of a beautiful blue walkway that once indicated the importance of ancient sacred site. The small size of the Ellensburg skystone samples suggests these were little walkways made by gnomes.

Recent news coverage on the subject of Paleolithic human remains has highlighted the unusual and intriguing past of the Pacific Northwest US, by announcing a set of spearpoint fragments and a round hammerstone as “the earliest evidence of human occupation in North America”. This is certainly not the case, as revealed by extensive physical remains of reptilian/human hybrid groups throughout the Americas.

From sedimentary layers recently radiocarbon¹⁴ dated from 10,000-16,000 years in age, various lithic artifacts were excavated from the deeper strata of a sandbar named Cooper’s Ferry, situated along the lower Salmon River in Central Idaho.²¹ Most impressive are several fragmentary spear points, along with round hammer stones that bear the marks of repeated striking from use as a hammer stone long ago.

Magnetic geopolymer basalt

Cooper’s Ferry, Idaho - 10,500 bp

A significant facet of the recovered evidence has not been noticed or even conceived of by archeologists and students conducting excavations at the Cooper’s Ferry Late Paleolithic site concerns the synthetic composition of the ‘hammerstone’. Microscopy and petrochemical analyses of this round basalt stone will evince the presence of fine Ti, Fe, Ni, Ag and Au particles within the stone matrix, confirming its artificial origin as Atlantean “firestone” magnetic geopolymer basalt tool (above).

Close inspection of the surfaces confirm this is not a natural, geologically-formed stone, but was cast as a magnetic basalt guasha tool for the purpose of body massage and magnetic healing under the enhanced electromagnetic conditions of the pyramid complexes of Zu, the Atlantean region of western North America.

Subsequent to the demise of the Atlantean civilization, the tool was recovered and used as a hammerstone. Cooper’s Ferry is located along a stretch of the Salmon River situated at the eastern edge of the Columbia Plateau; table lands composed largely of basalt that were deeply scarred by repeated flooding from Glacial Lake Missoula.

Atlantean cultural use of magnetic geopolymer basalt is well known from comparable pyramid complexes in Ecuador, including the Llanganates Pyramid Complex on the Zuñag River (just east of Tungurahua Volcano) and the La Maná Pyramid Complex. Magnetic geopolymer basalt and granite guasha tools recovered from the rivers near La Maná include oblate spheres that are nearly identical to the example recently excavated at Cooper's Ferry, Idaho. Both sites date from the same Late Paleolithic timeframe.

Investigations and prospecting for magnetic basalt geopolymer artifacts by this author while living in Dayton, Washington during early 2019, led to a series of astounding discoveries on the Touchet River. Nearly the entire riverbed was composed of magnetic geopolymer basalts, leading me to the conclusion that another giant pyramid complex must be located upriver, in rugged areas of the Blue Mountains.

After several years of research on Atlantean 'firestone' geopolymers of the pyramids of On in Central Ecuador, my attention was immediately caught by the many smoothly polished and extremely hard river stones of the Touchet River in Washington State. I quickly found several beautiful basalt and quartzite artifacts that I could readily recognize as geopolymer pavement tiles that showed identical geometric features to those from Central Ecuador. Their smooth surfaces suggested they had been well tumbled.

Of course, I immediately tested this hypothesis after buying a strong neodymium magnet for applying to the Touchet River basalt samples. Sure enough, every stone selected from the riverbed displays strong ferromagnetic properties, confirmed by microscopy as resulting from the presence of finely ground metal particles distributed evenly throughout the basalt matrix.

Before venturing upriver into the Blue Mountains to seek out the source of these synthetic basalt pyramid pavements, I reviewed the extensive geological evidence of the destructive forces of the Glacial Lake Missoula floods that raked the landscapes of the area dozens of times from 17,000-11,000bp.

A regional floodwaters map reveals the broad path of glacial meltwaters from Lake Missoula during the Late Paleolithic Period (above). Immense glacial formations covering most of present-day Canada and Alaska retreated over the course of several thousand years before the downfall of the Atlantean civilization

Severe damage to the original pyramid façades of this Atlantean temple complex has left very little of the flat façades that once stood out from the natural landscape. However, the landscapes of the Touchet River Valley, along both the Robinson and the Wolf Forks of the Touchet in addition to the primary North Fork, display clear geometric shaping that belies the work of human hands in the ancient past.

This large area of structured mountainsides has been identified as the work of the Parantha people, whose descendants have retained land rights at their sacred ancestral sites identified here, for the first time, as the Hupa and Karuk Pyramid Complexes of Northern California.

To emphasize this vital connection with the living descendants of the Parantha pyramid builders, the pyramids of the Touchet River Valley in the Blue mountains of southeastern Washington have been named: the Parantha Pyramid Complex (overleaf, opposite, above).

The northernmost extension of this huge sacred temple/city complex presents a series of adjacent triangular façades with apex walkways extending back along parallel or curving ridgelines to the central plateau above. Formation of these features was accomplished by surface mining of the basalt bedrock.

While nearly 13,000 years of soil accumulation from thick coniferous forests have blanketed subsurface features of the Parantha Pyramid Complex, many road-cuts along the forks of the Touchet River have exposed significant sections of artificial stonework (overleaf).

Deeply excavated road-cuts near the Lewis Creek confluence present several rock faces composed of high-quality magnetic geopolymer basalt that display a dark brown coloration, and was cast with geometric seam-work. This thick foundation layer of synthetic basalt sits above the entirely natural, volcanic basalt bedrock riddled with air pockets that possesses a more reddish coloration.

Long road-cuts traversing steep inclines and low cliffs seen along Jim Creek Road are littered with many well-preserved examples of magnetic geopolymer basalt foundation blocks and smaller paving stones, some of which display perfectly parallel planar faces that meet at regular 90° angles (above, opposite).

Their cast geometric forms and magnetic quality, conferred by the high content of finely ground particulate metals, confirm the artificial origin of these blocks as components of Atlantean pyramids that exactly match the unnatural features of stonework from the South American Andes and other related sites from various regions of the world.

At all of these ancient sacred city sites constructed by the Atlantean civilization using synthetic stonework, identical casting patterns were used to produce megalithic foundation blocks of the pyramids and overlaying walkway pavements that contained a higher content of powdered metals for generating intense EM fields on all contact surfaces and within the temple chambers for barefoot practitioners of biophotonic qi healing.

Earthenware jar fragments
Ravne 3 – Visoko, Bosnia

These highly advanced synthetic stone manufacturing techniques were developed by the great Atlantean civilization for re-façading entire mountainsides in geometric forms with exotic semiconductor materials that enhance the mountains' natural transduction of localized EM fields transduced from cosmic and planetary infrasound standing wave resonance.

Referred to as Atlantean 'firestone', these highly specialized geopolymer blends were carefully mixed and poured as we pour concrete or cement today. While large-scale construction projects are accomplished today using modern metal cement mixers, Atlantean construction methods utilized large ceramic jars that possessed the same exotic semiconductor composition of powdered metals used in the synthetic stone.

Fragmentary remains of many such massive geopolymer mixing jars have been recovered from various Atlantean pyramid complexes identified thus far. Fragments of dozens of megaceramic earthenware jars incised with Paleo-Sanskrit hieroglyphic texts were recovered at Ohum temple sites in Central Ecuador, Southern Peru and in Eastern Europe. Dating tests were not done on jar fragments from Ravne Tunnel 3 at the Visoko Pyramids of Bosnia in 2018, but were instead hidden away and dismissed as Roman (opposite).

The Parantha Pyramid Complex, Washington (46.192882°N, 117.83371°W) is located 6,842 miles from the Great Pyramid of present-day Giza, Egypt. This resonant interval comprises 27.49% of Earth's mean circumference, enabling efficient infrasound reception. A related Atlantean pyramid complex near Kamiah, Idaho (46.21072°N, 116.07655°W) is situated at the same latitude as the Parantha Pyramids, reflecting the 27.3% resonant distance shared by the Zu Pyramids of Montana and the Entiat Pyramids of Washington.

Serendipitous timing of the discovery of these magnificent Atlantean Pyramid complexes of the Pacific Northwest US –in late 2019– perfectly coincides with the imminent arrival of the Galactic Superwave, a beneficial influence that was well known to Atlantean astrophysicists.²²

These many major discoveries solidify the foundation of knowledge enabling reception of significant physiological and genetic benefits that Atlantean astrophysicists associated with the oncoming Betelgeuse supernova and resulting activation of the global psychoacoustic pyramid network on April 22, 2021.

While the promising future of bioelectrical qi healing research is now resurging, darker forces that have long dominated the consciousness of humanity for many thousands of years are now likewise being exposed. A cluster of unexplained disappearances has also been identified in the immediate vicinity of the Parantha Pyramids and to the south of the Touchet River drainage basin, where hunters seek their quarry.

On December 15, 1949 Donald McDonald went missing while hunting on Blacksnake Ridge, which represents the first well-documented event in a cluster of UFO beam abductions at the Parantha Pyramids:

Jack Farquharson (aged 21) and his friend Donald McDonald (aged 17)... were raised in the greater Walla Walla area and had substantial hunting experience. Both guys were hunting a ridgeline called Blacksnake Ridge. [During their winter elk hunt in December of 1949,] it was cold and the weather was about to change drastically. Jack was leading the pair and spotted a nice-sized elk and shot it.

The two boys started to track the wounded animal. Jack concentrated on tracking the blood and prints in the snow. Jack eventually found the dead animal and then turned to speak to Donald, but he was gone. Jack called Donald's name several times, but there was no answer. He walked back through their tracks, trying to retrace their path, but eventually lost them in the heavy snow.

Jack gutted the elk and brought it back to the camp that he and Donald had set up. For the next two days, Jack searched for his friend without finding any trace of him. On Saturday morning, half-frozen, Jack Farquharson stumbled into the Walla Walla County Sheriff's Office and reported his hunting partner missing.

The county sheriff, local ranchers, friends and relatives searched for a week for Donald but couldn't locate the hunter. They didn't find his rifle or his clothes –not one item to confirm that Donald was anywhere in the Blacksnake Ridge area. Snowstorms had hit the area the day Donald went missing, and this hampered search efforts and the ability of trackers to follow a path. It seemed there was little luck in finding Donald alive...

In June of 1950 there was another search for Donald. People felt that after the snow melted there would be a greater chance to recover the body. A three-day search led by Sheriff A.A. Shick produced nothing to confirm Donald was in the area.

It has now been over sixty years since Donald McDonald disappeared, and the reality of his disappearance is hard to understand. It is true that bodies rot and eventually go back to the ground, but clothes and rifles sometimes stay years and even decades, especially rifles. Nothing belonging to Donald McDonald has ever been found.²³

The unexplained disappearance of Donald McDonald was followed less than two years later by another UFO abduction event that included many more sinister elements that were uncovered during the investigation. The sudden vanishing of hunter Bobby Boatman from the area of Godman Springs, at higher elevations in the heart of the Blue mountains, raised many more questions for local authorities to consider:

An October 16, 1961 article in the Walla Walla Bulletin stated: "Bobby left here Saturday morning with two older men and was last seen on a ridge Sunday morning near Godman Springs, 30 miles southeast of Dayton. His companions spent the day searching for him. The morning following Bobby's disappearance, his friends reported him missing. That first night snow started falling hard in the mountains.

Deputy sheriffs, ranchers, and volunteers assisted in the search for Bobby. Authorities stated that they were optimistic they would find Bobby alive because of his background as a Boy Scout and his survival skills. The weather was so odd that it prompted District Ranger Homer Oft to make the following statement on December 21, 1949, to the Bulletin: "Freakish weather conditions blotted out communications with the 125 searchers who plowed through waist-deep snow in sub-freezing temperatures looking for the youth." A seven-day search for Bobby was unsuccessful.

It was almost five years to the exact day since he disappeared that law enforcement had their first break in the Bobby Boatman disappearance. On October 9, 1956, hunters in the Blue mountains found a rifle and a red cap. The items were found near Godman Springs by hunters Billy Watson, Robert Bailey and Jess Black. The rifle was a .30-caliber Remington. Both items were turned over to the sheriff. Sheriff E.E. "Duke" Warwick took the rifle to a friend of the Boatman's, who confirmed the rifle was Bobby's. It was later confirmed the red cap was also Bobby's.

An October 17, 1956 article in the Walla Walla Bulletin stated: "The red baseball cap of Boatman was discovered in a bush with the rifle nearby, as if he might have dropped both items and taken off running, the Watson party told Warwick. The covered portion of the hat was still identifiable as having been red."

On October 12, 1956, Sheriff Warwick took a team back into the area where Bobby's rifle was found in an effort to locate the body. An article in the October 20 Lewiston Morning Tribune reported the following: "Bones and clothing in the area believed to be those of a teenage hunter who vanished five years ago were found in the Blue Mountains Thursday under suspicious-stirring circumstances."

Sheriff Warwick identified the remains as [those of] Bobby Boatman. The incredible part of the find... is described next: "Deputy Sheriff Herschel Bowman, who was at the scene, said evidence indicated the boy's body had been placed under tree roots and covered with dirt, then later pulled from the shallow grave by animals. The bones were partially covered with dirt and debris about 100 yards from where hunters found Boatman's rifle and cap."

This was a very lucky find for the sheriff and his men. If it weren't for hunters coming forward with what they had found, the chances of Bobby ever being recovered would have been minimal. One of the last paragraphs in the article is probably one of the most disturbing statements made by a law enforcement officer I have ever read: "Sheriff Warwick said that on the basis of the evidence at hand, we don't know if there was foul play in this case. We will look into the possibility."

This is disturbing because of statements made by the sheriff's office just three days earlier. On October 17, 1956, Deputy Sheriff Billy Burton of Walla Walla County had explained to the media that in 1952 a knife and its sheath and a rope that Bobby Boatman used as a belt were found on a sandbar in Box Canyon. This little tidbit adds a lot to the investigation and should have been directly addressed as a major clue. I could not find any article or report from the Walla Walla sheriff or coroner indicating the cause of death of Bobby Boatman.²⁴

There are several clear lines of evidence implicating the aerial abduction of Bobby Boatman by UFO plasma beam. The sudden vanishing of Bobby from any area not far from his haunting party, and the sudden onset of severe weather ensuing the event that not only erased all traces of the event that could be tracked by canines, but also made communications between searchers impossible for days.

The appearance of items carried by Bobby Boatman on a sandbar 2 years later, and near the site of his disappearance 5 years later are also highly unusual, and suggest Bobby was held captive by the Baal quantum predators in the underground system of chambers and tunnels below the Parantha Pyramids. There can be no doubt that the victim's knife, sheath and rope belt had been placed on the sandbar 2 years after the abduction took place, as if the perpetrators wanted to antagonize the family and case investigators.

Just a couple months before the hunting party recovered Boatman's rifle and cap near Godman Springs, a closely related disappearance was reported; John Davis was abducted from a Burbank, Washington farm located due west of Walla Walla and the ancient Parantha Pyramid Complex of the Blue Mountains:

Davis was first reported as missing on August 26, 1956. A search of Davis's employer's ranch [in Burbank, Washington] was initiated at that time. The search of the Hooper sheep ranch took two weeks, and searchers were unable to find Davis. A witness states that he saw a strange object in the field in January under a pile of snow... [but, thinking] that what they saw was another sheep and ignored the object. The witness went back to the object that they observed and found it was the body of John Davis.

When John Davos's body was located, witnesses found something very strange. An article in the Walla Walla Union for February 19, 1957 stated, "Officers said that Davi's clothes were in a pile near the body"... [O]fficials stated at the time that there was no evidence of foul play. The body was found on February 18, 1957...

I would like to know how officials believed that Davis's clothes came off his body. If law enforcement didn't believe anything suspicious was associated with a naked body [of a deceased individual being found] in the middle of a field, I'd like to understand their thinking. I could not find any reports or articles that clarify this finding.²⁵

As seen in so many other cases of this kind, UFO abduction by HHO plasma beam levitation remains the only coherent explanation for the question of how the victim and items removed from his person were silently and invisibly deposited at a location where they could be easily seen from a distance. All the evidence in these cold cases clustering around the Parantha Pyramid Complex confirm the same pattern of quantum predatory activity witnessed at ancient Atlantean pyramid complexes distributed through the world.

While UFO abduction activity in southeastern Washington is revealed by the slew of unusual circumstances surrounding multiple cases, other pyramid complexes have been revealed in areas without a discernable cluster of unexplained disappearances, as is the case of the nearby Kamiah Pyramids of western Idaho.

The remains of an ancient Atlantean temple complex are situated west of the present-day town of Kamiah, Idaho, as revealed by the many linear geometric forms of the natural basalt landscape along Seven Mile Road. As witnessed at the Parantha Pyramids to the west, much of the original geopolymer basalt temple façades of the Kamiah complex was torn away by ice sheering during the disastrous Missoula Floods.

Kamiah Pyramid Complex, Idaho (46.21072°N, 116.07655°W, above) is located 6,802 miles from the Great Pyramid of Giza, Egypt, comprising 27.33% of Earth's mean circumference ($\frac{273}{1000}$). This resonant distance interval is shared by a nearby pyramid group at Kooskia, Idaho (below) and the Pyramids of Zu in Montana.

Another Atlantean temple complex is revealed by territorial behavior of giants in the highlands of Wyoming. A 1972 analysis of Sasquatch hairs recovered by US Forest Service field biologist John Mionczynski proved the presence of an unknown primate species in the Wind River Mountains, supporting the sighting reports of local residents.²⁶ Mionczynski was subsequently reprimanded by the head of his research division, and told he would be fired for any further conduct related to cryptozoological findings in the study area (inset below).

Shoshone Pyramid Complex, overlooking Clear, Faler and Bear Lakes in the Wind River Mountains of Wyoming (43.306571°N, 109.75331°W, above), is located 6,814 miles from the Great Pyramid of present-day Giza, Egypt. This resonant distance interval comprises 27.37% of Earth's mean circumference ($^{137}/_{500}$).

The votive tribal name 'Shoshone' is composed of five Paleo-Sanskrit hieroglyphs, reading: sh o sh on e, meaning "expiation, oh, expiation (of the) assent (of) submission". Several other Atlantean Era magnetic geopolymer basalt pyramid structures lay hidden to the north of the Wind River Range, in the Absaroka Mountain Range of northwestern Wyoming near the 44° North latitude.

A mountain pyramid with a straight apex walkway at Emerald Creek (43.88771°N, 109.49171°W, overleaf) is located 6,774 miles from the Great Pyramid, at the 27.21% distance interval. Another mountain pyramid with a long, curving apex walkway is found at Avalanche Creek (43.96259°N, 109.37003°W, overleaf), located 6,766 miles from the Great Pyramid; comprising 27.18% of Earth's mean circumference distance. A third mountain pyramid with an ascending apex walkway is situated on Francs Fork (43.9956°N, 109.25174°W, overleaf), located 6,761 miles from the Great Pyramid at the 27.16% resonant distance interval.

Distinctly geometric features of several other Paleo-Sanskrit temples clustered at the 44° North latitude in the Absaroka Mountains are found just east of Francs Fork (43.9706°N 109.258°W, above) and at Robinson Creek, Wyoming (43.9945°N, 109.76474°W, below) along the 27.2% resonant distance from Giza, Egypt.

When investigated from this perspective, the overwhelming confluence of data clusters involving sightings of giant Sasquatch, UFOs and related unexplained missing persons cases provide a general indicator where hidden subterranean sites may be found. Careful review of topographic data for these anomaly zones often confirms the presence of man-made structures cast long ago in synthetic Atlantean 'firestone' geopolymers.

This extremely reliable research methodology has continually revealed the presence of hidden underground tunnels networks linking large chambers used as hangers for a variety of immense aerospace vehicles.

The unexplained disappearance of 27-year-old Josh Hall, who vanished on February 3, 2021 while hiking with his dog in the vicinity of Devil's Thumb Lake, Colorado.²⁷ This lake is situated right below the rocky promontory known as the 'Devil's Thumb', which lies immediately below Mount Jasper. The large, triangular façade comprising the southwest face of Mount Jasper preserves a significant portion of synthetic andesite that is easily differentiated from more rugged, natural outcroppings observed on the mountain's other faces.

Arapaho Pyramid Complex, known as Mount Jasper, Colorado (39.99471°N, 105.683152°W, above) is located 6,880 miles from the Great Pyramid of present-day Giza, Egypt. This resonant distance interval corresponds to 27.64% of Earth's mean circumference ($\frac{69}{250}$), additionally ensuring efficient reception of focus infrasound resonance by exact placement along the 40° North latitude line.

Reflecting the same disturbing circumstances encompassing so many other sacred Paleo-Sanskrit sites worldwide, resonant temple chambers below Mount Jasper have been taken over by giant and aggressive quantum predators of the Baal ET consortium. Despite the feigned ignorance and continued obfuscation of Atlantean pyramids by US government agencies and mass media, the truth of our predicament is emerging.
